THE WEEK IN SOCIETY

A SHORT CHAPTER ON ORGANDIE EVENING GOWNS.

One of the Customs of the Times Is to Give Presents at Commencements.

At the receptions given during the week it was quite plain to be seen that the dainty organdie gowns are to supersede the light-weight silks for dancing and other parties. The material is so beautiful and comes in so many tints and with almost any design that a wearer can desire, that the young lady of the day can choose her favorite color and flower for her dress. Made with the full skirts, sleeves and waists that they are, they are fluffy and light and more fairylike than the proverbial thistle. The young girls were visions of freshness and beauty, and the few who wore silks and satins were scarcely noticed in comparison with the others. Because a dress is of organdie or mull does not mean that it is a cheap dress, by any means, for, with the quantities of material used and the lace and ribbons which are considered necessary adjuncts of the toilette, there is not much that is inexpensive. A feature of the large receptions was that the young girls were just leaving school and they wore jewels, which had been presented to them in honor of the occasion. Diamonds and dimity were quite the costume for the Presents for Graduates. The anniversaries and occasions when it is customary to give presents grow. Married life, for any number of years, is marked by special articles which may be given anywhere from one year up to seventy-five. Then the birthdays come in for their share of remembrances. All sorts of other occasions are taken as times for gifts, and now graduation is made the event, when relatives and friends vie with each other in giving. Books are considered appropriate things, and many a graduate leaves the hall bearing her arms full of books. Jewels in the form of rings and pins become the possession of nearly every girl, and this season the one who did not get a belt or neck buckle was the exception. Fans are another favorite present, and, if what are another favorite present, and, if what to give is the question, silver spoons and china articles are brought in. The flowers arrive in bunches which require bushel baskets in order to get them home without massing them too much. The girl graduate and the bride of to-day receive more and more valuable presents than they did a few years ago, and what the girl of the next decade will be given will probably surpass that of to-day. pass that of to-day.

Summer Jaunts. The fair took most people away from the city last year, and so far this season Europe has been the attraction. More Indianapolitans are en route to the old country now than have been for a long time. Some have gone for a few weeks, others for a few months. The trips are for various reasons and will be made in various ways. One party goes with bicycles and cameras, and will travel on their wheels and take pictures in the countries which they visit. Some will visit relatives and will have opportunities to study the home life in the old world. A lady who made an extended tour of Europe was unhappy because she had no excuse whereby she could enter a family and see how they lived. She will envy those who have relatives there. Some have gone to seek the famous springs and health, and others for travel and pleasure solely. When the autumn comes it will be quite the proper thing to have an even-ing with some of these friends and have them relate their experiences. The person who does not go to Europe pretends to be bored by the friend who does, but in reali-ty, unless the talk is overdone, he is very much interested. The reading of papers is a happy way to entertain, and a talk on Europe, with the pictures to show the places, will be even more enjoyable. Among those who have gone there are several who will be capable of telling their experiences.

Miss Eva Jeffries entertained a number of friends on Monday evening in honor of her guest, Miss Pearl Carpenter, of Louis-ville, at her home on University avenue. The reception rooms were decorated with peonies. In the dining room the table color was pink. In the center was a bowl of pink roses and carnations, while flowers of the same hue served as favors.

Friday night an unusually large audience filled the assembly hall of the university to witness the spring exhibition exercises of the Athenian Society. Two short comedies were very cleverly presented. The plays were gone through quickly and with spirit. The customary waits of amateur theatricals were entirely absent. In the first play, "Which Is Which," the parts were taken by Messrs. Miller, Shank and Bales and Misses Mary Galvin, Goe and Stover. The characters in "Lend Me Five Shillings" were taken by Messrs. Al Hall, E. W. Clark, Bales and Shipp and Misses Georgia Galvin and Kate Moore.

A reception was given Wednesday evening for the senior class of the college by President and Mrs. Scot Butler, at their home on Downey avenue. The flower adopted by the class is the carnation and color red. In harmony with this the house was decorated in a profusion of deep red roses and red carnations were presented as favors. The early part of the evening was spent in guessing fads, everyone wearing conspicuously about them their special fad. A young naturalist who wore a live crawfish chained to a pin attracted especial atten-tion. After refreshments the following toasts were responded to: "The Class of '94," Miss Anna Slover; "The Married Member," Mr. Charles A. Riley; "The Single Member," Mr. Charles E. Baker; "Our Guests, the Young Men," Miss Rose Eliot; "Our Guests, the Wives," Mr. George Hicks. A class peculiarity is that the large majority of the young men are married.
